

10 artists you should collect if you win the Powerball Jackpot

January 12, 2016 in New Contemporaries

by Alejandro Jassan. All images courtesy.

WINNER WINNER CHICKEN DINNER! The New York Times suggests that if you win Wednesday's Powerball Jackpot—a whooping 1.5 billion dollars, yes BILLION—, you should take the annuity and grow your fortune over the next 30 years. Business Insider wants you to hire a tax attorney. However, if I were the lucky winner, I'd put my money down to support those who will build our culture into the future. Below is a list of the 10 artists I would start my collection with.

7. Matthew Craven

Let's take a moment to re-think the meaning of the word synesthesia— a condition in which one type of stimulation evokes the sensation of another, as when the hearing of a sound produces the visualization of a color. Now that is the exact reaction that Craven's work does to your body. His work brings archaeology into a contemporary context by collaging shapes, patterns, and colors, to create compositions that, if not ethnical, resemble the path left by a culture, or maybe one that is being created. Get your scissors ready to cut out those Vanity Fairs!