Jasper de Beijer: The Brazilian Suitcase

Dutch artist Jasper de Beijer's latest body of work is a fictionalized series of travelogues spanning nearly a century. The images are a mix of staged photography and computer simulations, imagining a series of anthropological expeditions to the Amazon and contact with isolated tribes. The series looks to be a biting commentary on colonialism, but it should be interesting to see how this is received. I wouldn't be surprised if this became one of the most controversially-debated shows of the week.
